A well-known Euglish actor, travelling to Birmingham by the Great Western railway the other day, on approaching Banbury began to feel hungry, says the Jester, and determined to indulge in one of the buns for which the town is famous.

The train having pulled up, he hailed a boy, handed him sixpence, and commissioned him to get "two Banburys"-one of the two being promised him for his trouble.

Just as the train was about to start that boy came rushing up to the carrage in which the now impatient actor was seated, and holding out threepence exclaimed with mouth half full, "Here's your change, sir."

"Bother the change; where's the cake?" roared the hungry Thespian. "They had only one left," replied the boy, "and I'm eating that."
